ACHIEVING EXCELLENCE

Installation celebrates ACOE Silver Award

By Nathan Pfau
Army Flier Staff Writer

Fort Rucker recently garnered Army-wide recognition as a community of excellence and the installation took time to recognize its own during a ceremony Tuesday at the U.S. Army Aviation Museum.

Fort Rucker earned silver in the 2016 Army Communities of Excellence Award May 24 at the Pentagon, and Davis D. Tindoll Jr., Installation Management Command Atlantic Region director, attended Tuesday's ceremony to congratulate the garrison locally and express his pride in Fort Rucker for the job it's done to achieve such a feat.

"We are here today to recognize this team for achieving excellence," he said during the ceremony. "This award is a direct reflection of the workforce here and the dedication that it takes to run Fort Rucker from a base-ops perspective on a day-to-day basis.

"The Army Communities of Excellence program is based on the principle of continuous improvement ... and this is not something that's won (lightly)," said Tindoll. "It is built on sustainable years. Year after year of continuous improvement, and the fact that you won the Gold Award just a couple years ago, now followed by the Silver Award, (shows that) we're starting to see the trend."

During the ceremony, Tindoll presented the silver award streamer to be added to the garrison colors, which Col. Shannon T. Miller, Fort Rucker garrison commander, accepted and attached on behalf of the garrison.

Certificates were also presented to different directorates and garrison organizations for their contributions in creating the atmosphere that made Fort Rucker worthy of recognition as a community of excellence.

"Today, we have the opportunity to recognize the garrison team for the many contributions of hard work that they have provided, which culminated in us receiving (this award)," said the garrison commander. "I'm extremely proud of each and every one of you, and while I know that the few of you who were represented up here today receiving certificates, I'd like to also recognize those behind-the-scenes professionals striving for that excellence every day.

"We won the silver award because it's a true team effort," said Miller. "What truly matters is the excellence that we provide day in and day out to our Soldiers, the families and to our civilians."

The ACOE award honors the top Army, National Guard and Reserve installations that have achieved high levels of excellence in building a quality environment, outstanding facilities and superior services, and throughout the year-long process, ACOE applicants are assessed and evaluated against the Army priorities and Malcolm Baldrige Criteria, according to Deena Jones, plans, analysis and integration office director.

One of the areas where the installation excelled was customer focus. Fort Rucker typically sustains a greater-than 90 percent of customer satisfaction rating, said Jones, exceeding the IMCOM standard for customer satisfaction.

That level of satisfaction wouldn't be possible without the efforts of the entire garrison team and its ability to perform with the resources it is provided, according to Col. Thomas R. Drew, U.S. Army Aviation Center of Excellence and Fort Rucker deputy commander.

"We're in a resource-constrained environment right now, so these awards that you get really come down to innovation, and how to make the most out of every day and every dollar that you're getting," he said. "I can tell you that this staff and the community is really why we're getting this award."

"Fort Rucker has overcome their obstacles they have identified and improved processes where they needed to," said Tindoll. "They've rolled up their sleeves and did the hard work. I'm extremely proud of your accomplishments. I know you work hard each and every day to provide extraordinary services for Soldiers, family members, civilians and retirees."

Fort Rucker welcomes new CSM

Command Sgt. Maj. Christopher D. Spivey assumed responsibility from Command Sgt. Maj. William D. Lohmeyer.

Col. Shannon T. Miller, Fort Rucker garrison commander, presided over the ceremony to welcome the new command sergeant major while she bid farewell to her friend and confidant.

"Command Sergeant Major Lohmeyer, you have been a phenomenal battle buddy to me, a phenomenal adviser, confidant and friend, and I sincerely appreciate everything you've done for me and the garrison," said the garrison commander. "I feel blessed that God and the Army saw it fit to pair me up with Sergeant Major Lohmeyer because I know that we would not have been successful without your leadership.

"At the same time, we are welcoming another great team – Command Sergeant Major Spivey and his wife (CW3 Gina Spivey), who serves at the Warrant Officer Career College," she continued. "Command Sergeant Major Spivey, I have the utmost confidence in you. I know that you have exactly what it takes to lead our organization to higher levels of excellence and I look

Post puts emergency response to test

Fort Rucker makes sure its first responders and emergency personnel know exactly what to do in an emergency situation, and it will put those skills to the test when the installation holds its annual all-hazards exercise Wednesday.

The exercise will be in the form of an active shooter scenario designed to test Fort Rucker's and the surrounding communities' response to a threat on post, according to Willie Worsham, Fort Rucker emergency manager.

"This scenario will involve an active shooter and explosive threat to the installation from a homegrown violent extremist," Worsham said. "We need to be able to teach first responders and emergency personnel what is required when there is an active shooter on the installation. We will go through the same processes as we would if I got a phone call right now saying there was

PERSPECTIVE

Rules DOD employees should know this political season

By Katie Lange
Department of Defense News

I'm sure you've all seen political posts in full effect on Facebook, Twitter and Snapchat recently.

The opinions are just going to get louder, too, before the election this November.

As members of the Department of Defense, we have a responsibility to be smart about what we post, as well as how we participate in political activity and how we support political campaigns. DOD employees are limited to certain political activities under the Hatch Act, which is meant to protect employees from political coercion at work, as well as make sure employees move up in their careers based on their merit, not political affiliation.

So, for those who are politically active, here's a refresher of what limitations they need to be aware of.

Service members

Political Activity — Active-duty service members (in and out of uniform) aren't allowed to engage in partisan political activities, meaning no campaigning for candidates, joining in on fundraising activities, serving as an officer in a partisan club or speaking at a partisan gathering. All military personnel are also supposed to avoid implying or appearing to imply that any of their political activities are endorsed or sponsored by the DOD.

However, when out of uniform, service members are allowed to express their personal political opinions, donate money to campaigns or organizations and attend political events as a spectator. But again, that's out of uniform – not in it. More specifics on the rules are available at <http://www.dtic.mil/whs/directives/corres/pdf/134410p.pdf>.

Social media — You are allowed to express your personal views and politics via your own social media platforms, but when you're doing that, and you've been identified as a DOD employee on that platform, make sure it's clear that the views you're expressing are your own, not the DOD's.

While you're allowed to follow, friend and like a party or candidate, you're not allowed to share or retweet information posted to that corresponding social media page. You're not supposed to post links to that page's content, either. It's considered participating in political activities.

Always remember – don't violate the Uniform Code of Military Justice or service regulations. That means don't show contempt for public officials, post unprofessional material or release sensitive information.

More guidance for service members is available at http://www.dod.mil/dodgc/defense_ethics/resource_library/faqs_political_activities_armed_forces.pdf.

DOD civilians

Political activity — While on duty or in a federal building, DOD civilian employees are not allowed to engage in political activities, such as sending or forwarding political emails or posting political messages to social media accounts, even from your own devices. Don't ever use government equipment for those activities, either.

However, when it comes to what you can do politically, there are basically two groups of civilians: further restricted employees and less restricted employees.

Further restricted employees include:

- Those appointed by the president and confirmed by the Senate;
- Those serving in non-career senior executive service positions;
- Career members of the SES;
- Contract appeals board members; and
- Employees of the National Security Agency, Defense Intelligence Agency and National Geo-Spatial Intelligence Agency.

The above people are prohibited from participating in political activity, especially any that's sponsored or supported by a party, political group or candidate up for election. You also can't solicit or receive political contributions. However, further restricted employees can make monetary contributions, express personal opinions and attend campaign events or fundraisers sponsored by a candidate – they just can't actively participate.

Less restricted employees include all DOD civilians who aren't listed above, including Schedule C political appointees.

These people can volunteer with a political campaign or organization on their personal time. That includes organizing rallies or meetings, making calls on behalf of a candidate, serving as a delegate to a party convention and working for a party to get out the vote on Election Day. Less restricted employees still cannot solicit or receive political contributions, though.

Social media — Like the social media rules for service members, DOD civilians are allowed to express personal views and politics via their own social media platforms, but they have to make it clear that the views they're expressing are personal and not the DOD's.

Since further restricted employees (as listed above) aren't allowed to be part of partisan political activity, they also can't share or retweet information posted to the social media page of a party or candidate. They can't post links from a party or candidate's account, either, but they can follow, friend or like them.

To get more specifics on how to avoid violating the rules on social media, visit http://www.dod.mil/dodgc/defense_ethics/resource_library/hatch_act_and_social_media.pdf.

JCS chairman visit to Turkey 1st by senior U.S. official since coup attempt

By Jim Garamone

Department of Defense News

ANKARA, Turkey — Though they are both national leaders, the trip here to visit Gen. Hulusi Akar of the Turkish army by Marine Corps Gen. Joe Dunford was one friend making sure another was well after a traumatic experience.

The chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff visited Turkey's chief of defense Monday, just a little over two weeks after Akar was kidnapped, drugged and threatened as part of the unsuccessful coup.

The plotters were trying to topple the government led by President Recep Tayyip Erdogan. It failed, but more than 250 people were killed and more than 2,100 were wounded, according to Turkish figures.

Dunford is the first international leader to visit Turkey since the coup was defeated. "I've known General Akar — my counterpart — for a long time," Dunford said, adding that he wanted to be sure his friend was all right.

Dunford said Akar told him that one of his aides had turned on him and sided with the coup plotters. They kidnapped him and held a pistol to his head to get him to sign a proclamation in support of the coup. He refused. Akar was held until the coup fell apart after Erdogan rallied the Turkish people to reject the attack on democracy in the country and take on the coup plotters.

Marine Corps Gen. Joseph F. Dunford Jr., chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, meets with Ismail Kahraman, speaker of Turkey's Grand National Assembly, in Ankara, Turkey, Monday.

Dunford said Akar was pleased with the visit, and confirmed that Turkey desires to keep a broad partnership with the United States across a broad range of issues, but especially in NATO and in countering the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant.

The chairman said Akar assured him that Turkey will continue to provide access to Turkish bases in Incirlik and Diyarbakir. These bases are key to the fight against ISIL.

Akar also took Dunford to the Turkish parliament. He showed the chairman the results of the four bombs coup F-16s dropped on the building and the effects that attack helicopters had on it. Following the tour, Dunford met some Turkish lawmakers.

Then Dunford, Akar and U.S. Ambassador to Turkey John Bass met with Turkish Prime Minister Binali Yildirim. In all of the meetings, he heard that "to deal with the challenges of the region is going to require the United States and Turkey to cooperate," Dunford said. "The consistent theme throughout the day was a reaffirmation of the importance of the U.S.-Turkey relationship — the need for us to cooperate," he added. "We will have all the access we need to Incirlik, Diyarbakir and other facilities as necessary to prosecute the counter-ISIL fight."

Dunford said the tone in all the meetings was positive and "not accusatory at all."

In all of the meetings, Dunford said, he also heard about the need for the United States to send Fethullah Gulen — a former imam who is self-exiled in Pennsylvania — back to Turkey. Turkish leaders believe he is behind the coup.

"I told them that I will be sure the Turkish perspective is conveyed to my leadership," Dunford said.

The chairman said he is encouraged not only about the military-to-military relationship between the two countries, but also about the broader relationship.

"We have some differences on how to deal with (ISIL)," Dunford said. "But I think an express willingness to work through these issues and share perspectives will mean stability in the region."

Akar already was scheduled for a counterpart visit to Washington this month. Dunford said he told the Turkish general that he hopes he will still come, noting that they have a lot to talk about: ISIL, bases, tactics and so on that they did not talk about during this visit.

"I wanted to practice a little bit of patience, recognizing that my friend had been through a traumatic experience," the chairman said. "Me going in there with a laundry list of 'asks' is not appropriate for a friendship — that's a transactional relationship — and that is not what this is. I was just glad to hear my friend's voice again."

SecDef urges troops to build on momentum in Iraq, Syria

By Jim Garamone

Department of Defense News

WASHINGTON — Defense Secretary Ash Carter July 27 told troops readying to deploy to Iraq that they must build on the momentum to defeat the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant.

The secretary addressed service members set to deploy with the XVIII Airborne Corps at Fort Bragg, North Carolina. The unit will replace the III Corps as the American portion of Operation Inherent Resolve with Lt. Gen. Sean MacFarland passing command to Lt. Gen. Stephen Townsend.

Carter called on the troops to help accelerate the defeat of ISIL.

"Last fall we introduced an initial series of accelerants to help us gather momentum," the secretary said. The United States, he said, deployed additional strike aircraft and aimed them at new targets and new categories of targets illuminated by refined intelligence.

Strategy

"We deployed an initial contingent of special operations forces to Syria, and expanded equipping of Syrian Arab forces engaged in the fight against ISIL, as well as training and equipping of the Iraqi security forces, including the Kurdish peshmerga," Carter said. "We introduced an expeditionary targeting force. And we started to expand our military campaign to every domain, including cyber."

The secretary continued, "We also asked all our coalition countries to make additional contributions to the campaign, which they did — contributing strike aircraft, special operations forces, trainers, engineers, logisticians, lift capabilities and other critical enablers."

Carter said these efforts have worked, as Iraqi and Syrian forces have retaken territory from ISIL.

"As a result, play by play, town after town, from every direction and in every domain, our campaign has accelerated further squeezing ISIL and rolling it back towards Raqqa and Mosul," the secretary said. "By isolating those two cities, we're effectively setting the stage to collapse ISIL's control over them."

More needs to be done, the secretary told the Soldiers.

"We've seized opportunities, reinforced success and taken the fight to the enemy," Carter said. "But we are not going to rest — and that's why you're going to build on those results, continue to take the fight to the enemy, gather more momentum and help deliver ISIL a lasting defeat. I have every confidence that you will."

Stopping ISIL's movements

In Syria, indigenous and coalition forces will work to shut down the last remaining paths for ISIL fighters to move in and out of the country along the border with Turkey, the secretary said.

"In Iraq, we will continue enabling the dedicated Iraqi security forces and Peshmerga led by Prime Minister Haidar al-Abadi and supported by Kurdish Regional President Masoud Barzani — working by, with and through the Iraqi government, as we always have," he said.

U.S. service members will focus on helping Iraqi forces pursue mopping-up operations along the Euphrates River Valley, Carter said.

"In the north, we will continue to help the Iraqi security forces clear the remaining pockets of ISIL control along the Tigris River Valley," he said. "Simultaneously, we will help the Iraqi security forces — including the Kurdish peshmerga — to refit and generate the forces and logistical footprint necessary to isolate and pressure Mosul."

This strategy will culminate in the collapse of ISIL's control over the cities of Mosul in Iraq and Raqqa in Syria, Carter said.

The coalition is doing more in the region with President Barack Obama ordering an additional 560 troops to support Iraqi forces in their offensive to retake Mosul, Carter said.

"Other nations are following our lead, and making commitments, as well," he added. "France is sending back the aircraft carrier Charles de Gaulle to carry out airstrikes against ISIL. Australia will be expanding their training of Iraqi police and border guards, which will be vital for security in Iraq after ISIL's defeat. And the United Kingdom recently announced it would deploy more trainers and engineers to Iraq, as well."

Rebuilding

Taking the territory is the first move, holding it will be crucial, the secretary said.

"There will be towns to rebuild, services to reestablish and communities to restore," Carter said. "Such progress is critical to ensuring that ISIL, once defeated, stays defeated, so that our partners' gains are made irreversible."

The international coalition's stabilization and governance efforts must keep pace with security gains, he said.

"Destroying the fact and the idea of an Islamic state based on ISIL's barbaric ideology will not be easy," Carter said. "The more ground ISIL loses in Iraq and Syria, the more they'll do whatever it takes to cling to their perverse veil of legitimacy."

The coalition must stop ISIL wherever it rears its head, the secretary said.

"We must keep systematically eliminating every key leader we find," he said. "And we must deny them every safe haven, wherever they may seek it — from physical terrain to cyberspace, because that is what's necessary to keep our country safe."

Carter said he knows there will be tough days ahead.

"But we have the right campaign plan, the most capable commanders, motivated partners who are growing in strength, and — most importantly — we have you," he said.

many leadership positions, including team and squad leader, platoon sergeant and operations sergeant major.

Spivey has also served in multiple deployments, including Operation Desert Storm, Operation Iraqi Freedom and Operation Enduring Freedom, as well as deployments to Bosnia and Djibouti.

With his wealth of experience, Spivey said he hopes to be able to follow in the footsteps of the path set forth by his predecessor.

"I've heard it once and I've heard it many times – I have big shoes to fill," said Spivey. "After the past couple of weeks, I see what they mean. I really don't think anyone could come in here and have as large of an impact as you have had. You have done an amazing job, and it shows how much by the amount of respect you get from the people around you and how much they genuinely care for you.

"I may not be able to fill your shoes, but I can certainly walk in the path that you've created," he said. "I will continue where you left off. Fort Rucker has a very distinct history, and as each day passes, I look forward to adding to that history.

Lohmeyer thanked his family, friends and leaders for their support throughout his assignment on Fort Rucker and expressed his vote of confidence in Spivey, as well as a bit of advice.

"Command Sergeant Major Spivey, I envy you," said the outgoing command sergeant major. "You and Gina are about to embark on a job where you don't have to wake the workforce up in the morning and you don't have to tell them (how to do their job) – they just do it all on their own, and all you have to do is walk around and tell them thanks every now and then."

dren and pets in harm's way, that bit of negligence can prove to be a deadly mistake, according to Joy McCormick, social worker with the Fort Rucker New Parent Support Program.

"Most children who are left in a vehicle were not left intentionally," she said. "It is usually a person who is not in the routine of taking a child with them who accidentally forgets about a child in the back seat."

Oftentimes children may fall asleep or not make any noise, causing a person to possibly forget the child is back there, said McCormick, adding that negligence can have deadly consequences.

Since 1990, at least 775 children have died of vehicular heat stroke with 24 deaths having occurred in 2016 alone, according to www.kidsandcars.org.

According to the website, the inside of a vehicle can heat up very quickly on a hot day, even with the windows cracked, reaching temperatures of up to 125 degrees in just minutes.

Many times children are left in cars either because a parent or caregiver may be sleep deprived or exhausted, or decided he or she was going to run into a store for "just a minute," but those minutes can be the difference between life and death for a child or pet left in a car, McCormick said.

"The inside of a car can heat up within seconds of the ignition being turned off, especially in the heat we experience in the South," she said. "A child's body overheats three to five times faster than an adult body, so it doesn't take long for the situation to be life threatening for a child left in a vehicle. Even with the outside temperature in the 60s, the inside of the car can heat up to well over 110 degrees in a matter of minutes."

Death can occur in a matter of minutes if a child is left in a non-running vehicle, said the social worker. The child first becomes dehydrated and then possibly experience heat cramps, which is soon followed by heat exhaustion, which, when untreated, leads to heat stroke. The situation becomes critical if heat exhaustion is reached and not reversed quickly, and can lead to permanent disability such as brain damage and death.

Sometimes people can get distracted or even forgetful of the child being in the car, and McCormick suggests, to help prevent that level of distraction, to leave reminders that the child is in the vehicle.

"It is easy to get distracted," she said. "One thing that is suggested to assist with the situation is to put something that you normally carry with you, such as a name tag, purse, or brief case, in the back seat so you have to open the back door to get it out. This will help remind you of the child in the back seat."

"Or put the diaper bag or a stuffed animal in the front seat beside you so it reminds you of the child in the back seat," said the NPSP social worker. "This is a serious situation. Not only can a child lose its life, but legal charges can be made against the person leaving the child unattended in the car."

McCormick said that it's not always a parent leaving a child in a locked car that leads to vehicular heat stroke, but increasingly it's children who have found themselves entering an unlocked vehicle and not able to get out.

"The child safety locks may be in place and will not allow the door to be re-opened, or the child may not know how to get the shut door open," she said. "It is recommended that you lock your car doors when you get out of it, even in the garage or driveway, and put the keys where children cannot get to them. Never leave a child alone in or around a vehicle, even for a minute."

If a person finds a child in a car unattended and they seem to be at risk, they shouldn't hesitate to get involved, said McCormick. They should get the child out of the car as quickly as possible and call 911 or the local emergency number to get immediate assistance.

an actual shooter on post."

People should expect some short delays at the gates and near Andrews Avenue on Wednesday, but things will be as normal as possible outside the exercise area, he said. Aside from completely shutting down the installation, the exercise will be as real-world as it gets for law enforcement and emergency personnel.

The need for exercises like the active shooter scenario stems from homegrown and foreign terrorist threats, and Worsham said no matter how unlikely a scenario may seem, it's always best to be prepared.

"Terrorists are getting smarter every day and we just want to make sure that we are up on the latest techniques for handling situations like this," he said. "It seems like we learn something new every time.

"Every time we do this, we learn more capabilities from the partners of our mutual aid agreements and what they can do to help us," Worsham said. "With us continuing to do exercises together, it makes us a lot more proficient at what we do."

He added that this is the "perfect time for people to exercise their plans in the event an incident occurs on the installation – remember to make a plan, build a kit and be informed."

ACHIEVING EXCELLENCE

Installation celebrates ACOE Silver Award

By Nathan Pfau
Army Flier Staff Writer

Fort Rucker recently garnered Army-wide recognition as a community of excellence and the installation took time to recognize its own during a ceremony Tuesday at the U.S. Army Aviation Museum.

Fort Rucker earned silver in the 2016 Army Communities of Excellence Award May 24 at the Pentagon, and Davis D. Tindoll Jr., Installation Management Command Atlantic Region director, attended Tuesday's ceremony to congratulate the garrison locally and express his pride in Fort Rucker for the job it's done to achieve such a feat.

"We are here today to recognize this team for achieving excellence," he said during the ceremony. "This award is a direct reflection of the workforce here and the dedication that it takes to run Fort Rucker from a base-ops perspective on a day-to-day basis.

"The Army Communities of Excellence program is based on the principle of continuous improvement ... and this is not something that's won (lightly)," said Tindoll. "It is built on sustainable years. Year after year of continuous improvement, and the fact that you won the Gold Award just a couple years ago, now followed by the Silver Award, (shows that) we're starting to see the trend."

During the ceremony, Tindoll presented the silver award streamer to be added to the garrison colors, which Col. Shannon T. Miller, Fort Rucker garrison commander, accepted and attached on behalf of the garrison.

Certificates were also presented to different directorates and garrison organizations for their contributions in creating the atmosphere that made Fort Rucker worthy of recognition as a community of excellence.

"Today, we have the opportunity to recognize the garrison team for the many contributions of hard work that they have provided, which culminated in us receiving (this award)," said the garrison commander. "I'm extremely proud of each and every one of you, and while I know that the few of you who were represented up here today receiving certificates, I'd like to also recognize those behind-the-scenes professionals striving for that excellence every day.

"We won the silver award because it's a true team effort," said Miller. "What truly matters is the excellence that we provide day in and day out to our Soldiers, the families and to our civilians."

The ACOE award honors the top Army, National Guard and Reserve installations that have achieved high levels of excellence in building a quality environment, outstanding facilities and superior services, and throughout the year-long process, ACOE applicants are assessed and evaluated against the Army priorities and Malcolm Baldrige Criteria, according to Deena Jones, plans, analysis and integration office director.

One of the areas where the installation excelled was customer focus. Fort Rucker typically sustains a greater-than 90 percent of customer satisfaction rating, said Jones, exceeding the IMCOM standard for customer satisfaction.

That level of satisfaction wouldn't be possible without the efforts of the entire garrison team and its ability to perform with the resources it is provided, according to Col. Thomas R. Drew, U.S. Army Aviation Center of Excellence and Fort Rucker deputy commander.

"We're in a resource-constrained environment right now, so these awards that you get really come down to innovation, and how to make the most out of every day and every dollar that you're getting," he said. "I can tell you that this staff and the community is really why we're getting this award."

"Fort Rucker has overcome their obstacles they have identified and improved processes where they needed to," said Tindoll. "They've rolled up their sleeves and did the hard work. I'm extremely proud of your accomplishments. I know you work hard each and every day to provide extraordinary services for Soldiers, family members, civilians and retirees."

Fort Rucker welcomed a new garrison command sergeant major while it bid farewell to the outgoing senior NCO during a ceremony at the U.S. Army Aviation Museum Tuesday.

Col. Shannon T. Miller, Fort Rucker garrison commander, presided over the ceremony to welcome the new command sergeant major while she bid farewell to her friend and confidant.

"Command Sergeant Major Lohmeyer, you have been a phenomenal battle buddy to me, a phenomenal adviser, confidant and friend, and I sincerely appreciate everything you've done for me and the garrison," said the garrison commander. "I feel blessed that God and the Army saw it fit to pair me up with Sergeant Major Lohmeyer because I know that we would not have been successful without your leadership.

"At the same time, we are welcoming another great team – Command Sergeant Major Spivey and his wife (CW3 Gina Spivey), who serves at the Warrant Officer Career College," she continued. "Command Sergeant Major Spivey, I have the utmost confidence in you. I know that you have exactly what it takes to lead our organization to higher levels of excellence and I look

Fort Rucker makes sure its first responders and emergency personnel know exactly what to do in an emergency situation, and it will put those skills to the test when the installation holds its annual all-hazards exercise Wednesday.

The exercise will be in the form of an active shooter scenario designed to test Fort Rucker's and the surrounding communities' response to a threat on post, according to Willie Worsham, Fort Rucker emergency manager.

"This scenario will involve an active shooter and explosive threat to the installation from a homegrown violent extremist," Worsham said. "We need to be able to teach first responders and emergency personnel what is required when there is an active shooter on the installation. We will go through the same processes as we would if I got a phone call right now saying there was

Rules DOD employees should know this political season

By Katie Lange
Department of Defense News

I'm sure you've all seen political posts in full effect on Facebook, Twitter and Snapchat recently.

The opinions are just going to get louder, too, before the election this November.

As members of the Department of Defense, we have a responsibility to be smart about what we post, as well as how we participate in political activity and how we support political campaigns. DOD employees are limited to certain political activities under the Hatch Act, which is meant to protect employees from political coercion at work, as well as make sure employees move up in their careers based on their merit, not political affiliation.

So, for those who are politically active, here's a refresher of what limitations they need to be aware of.

Service members

Political Activity — Active-duty service members (in and out of uniform) aren't allowed to engage in partisan political activities, meaning no campaigning for candidates, joining in on fundraising activities, serving as an officer in a partisan club or speaking at a partisan gathering. All military personnel are also supposed to avoid implying or appearing to imply that any of their political activities are endorsed or sponsored by the DOD.

However, when out of uniform, service members are allowed to express their personal political opinions, donate money to campaigns or organizations and attend political events as a spectator. But again, that's out of uniform – not in it. More specifics on the rules are available at <http://www.dtic.mil/whs/directives/corres/pdf/134410p.pdf>.

Social media — You are allowed to express your personal views and politics via your own social media platforms, but when you're doing that, and you've been identified as a DOD employee on that platform, make sure it's clear that the views you're expressing are your own, not the DOD's.

While you're allowed to follow, friend and like a party or candidate, you're not allowed to share or retweet information posted to that corresponding social media page. You're not supposed to post links to that page's content, either. It's considered participating in political activities.

Always remember – don't violate the Uniform Code of Military Justice or service regulations. That means don't show contempt for public officials, post unprofessional material or release sensitive information.

More guidance for service members is available at http://www.dod.mil/dodgc/defense_ethics/resource_library/faqs_political_activities_armed_forces.pdf.

DOD civilians

Political activity — While on duty or in a federal building, DOD civilian employees are not allowed to engage in political activities, such as sending or forwarding political emails or posting political messages to social media accounts, even from your own devices. Don't ever use government equipment for those activities, either.

However, when it comes to what you can do politically, there are basically two groups of civilians: further restricted employees and less restricted employees.

Further restricted employees include:

- Those appointed by the president and confirmed by the Senate;
- Those serving in non-career senior executive service positions;
- Career members of the SES;
- Contract appeals board members; and
- Employees of the National Security Agency, Defense Intelligence Agency and National Geo-Spatial Intelligence Agency.

The above people are prohibited from participating in political activity, especially any that's sponsored or supported by a party, political group or candidate up for election. You also can't solicit or receive political contributions. However, further restricted employees can make monetary contributions, express personal opinions and attend campaign events or fundraisers sponsored by a candidate – they just can't actively participate.

Less restricted employees include all DOD civilians who aren't listed above, including Schedule C political appointees.

These people can volunteer with a political campaign or organization on their personal time. That includes organizing rallies or meetings, making calls on behalf of a candidate, serving as a delegate to a party convention and working for a party to get out the vote on Election Day. Less restricted employees still cannot solicit or receive political contributions, though.

Social media — Like the social media rules for service members, DOD civilians are allowed to express personal views and politics via their own social media platforms, but they have to make it clear that the views they're expressing are personal and not the DOD's.

Since further restricted employees (as listed above) aren't allowed to be part of partisan political activity, they also can't share or retweet information posted to the social media page of a party or candidate. They can't post links from a party or candidate's account, either, but they can follow, friend or like them.

To get more specifics on how to avoid violating the rules on social media, visit http://www.dod.mil/dodgc/defense_ethics/resource_library/hatch_act_and_social_media.pdf.

JCS chairman visit to Turkey 1st by senior U.S. official since coup attempt

By Jim Garamone

Department of Defense News

ANKARA, Turkey — Though they are both national leaders, the trip here to visit Gen. Hulusi Akar of the Turkish army by Marine Corps Gen. Joe Dunford was one friend making sure another was well after a traumatic experience.

The chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff visited Turkey's chief of defense Monday, just a little over two weeks after Akar was kidnapped, drugged and threatened as part of the unsuccessful coup.

The plotters were trying to topple the government led by President Recep Tayyip Erdogan. It failed, but more than 250 people were killed and more than 2,100 were wounded, according to Turkish figures.

Dunford is the first international leader to visit Turkey since the coup was defeated. "I've known General Akar — my counterpart — for a long time," Dunford said, adding that he wanted to be sure his friend was all right.

Dunford said Akar told him that one of his aides had turned on him and sided with the coup plotters. They kidnapped him and held a pistol to his head to get him to sign a proclamation in support of the coup. He refused. Akar was held until the coup fell apart after Erdogan rallied the Turkish people to reject the attack on democracy in the country and take on the coup plotters.

Marine Corps Gen. Joseph F. Dunford Jr., chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, meets with Ismail Kahraman, speaker of Turkey's Grand National Assembly, in Ankara, Turkey, Monday.

Dunford said Akar was pleased with the visit, and confirmed that Turkey desires to keep a broad partnership with the United States across a broad range of issues, but especially in NATO and in countering the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant.

The chairman said Akar assured him that Turkey will continue to provide access to Turkish bases in Incirlik and Diyarbakir. These bases are key to the fight against ISIL.

Akar also took Dunford to the Turkish parliament. He showed the chairman the results of the four bombs coup F-16s dropped on the building and the effects that attack helicopters had on it. Following the tour, Dunford met some Turkish lawmakers.

Then Dunford, Akar and U.S. Ambassador to Turkey John Bass met with Turkish Prime Minister Binali Yildirim. In all of the meetings, he heard that "to deal with the challenges of the region is going to require the United States and Turkey to cooperate," Dunford said. "The consistent theme throughout the day was a reaffirmation of the importance of the U.S.-Turkey relationship — the need for us to cooperate," he added. "We will have all the access we need to Incirlik, Diyarbakir and other facilities as necessary to prosecute the counter-ISIL fight."

Dunford said the tone in all the meetings was positive and "not

accusatory at all."

In all of the meetings, Dunford said, he also heard about the need for the United States to send Fethullah Gulen — a former imam who is self-exiled in Pennsylvania — back to Turkey. Turkish leaders believe he is behind the coup.

"I told them that I will be sure the Turkish perspective is conveyed to my leadership," Dunford said.

The chairman said he is encouraged not only about the military-to-military relationship between the two countries, but also about the broader relationship.

"We have some differences on how to deal with (ISIL)," Dunford said. "But I think an express willingness to work through these issues and share perspectives will mean stability in the region."

Akar already was scheduled for a counterpart visit to Washington this month. Dunford said he told the Turkish general that he hopes he will still come, noting that they have a lot to talk about: ISIL, bases, tactics and so on that they did not talk about during this visit.

"I wanted to practice a little bit of patience, recognizing that my friend had been through a traumatic experience," the chairman said. "Me going in there with a laundry list of 'asks' is not appropriate for a friendship — that's a transactional relationship — and that is not what this is. I was just glad to hear my friend's voice again."

SecDef urges troops to build on momentum in Iraq, Syria

By Jim Garamone

Department of Defense News

WASHINGTON — Defense Secretary Ash Carter July 27 told troops readying to deploy to Iraq that they must build on the momentum to defeat the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant.

The secretary addressed service members set to deploy with the XVIII Airborne Corps at Fort Bragg, North Carolina. The unit will replace the III Corps as the American portion of Operation Inherent Resolve with Lt. Gen. Sean MacFarland passing command to Lt. Gen. Stephen Townsend.

Carter called on the troops to help accelerate the defeat of ISIL.

"Last fall we introduced an initial series of accelerants to help us gather momentum," the secretary said. The United States, he said, deployed additional strike aircraft and aimed them at new targets and new categories of targets illuminated by refined intelligence.

Strategy

"We deployed an initial contingent of special operations forces to Syria, and expanded equipping of Syrian Arab forces engaged in the fight against ISIL, as well as training and equipping of the Iraqi security forces, including the Kurdish peshmerga," Carter said. "We introduced an expeditionary targeting force. And we started to expand our military campaign to every domain, including cyber."

The secretary continued, "We also asked all our coalition countries to make additional contributions to the campaign, which they did — contributing strike aircraft, special operations forces, trainers, engineers, logisticians, lift capabilities and other critical enablers."

Carter said these efforts have worked, as Iraqi and Syrian forces have retaken territory from ISIL.

"As a result, play by play, town after town, from every direction and in every domain, our campaign has accelerated further squeezing ISIL and rolling it back towards Raqqa and Mosul," the secretary said. "By isolating those two cities, we're effectively setting the stage to collapse ISIL's control over them."

More needs to be done, the secretary told the Soldiers.

"We've seized opportunities, reinforced success and taken the fight to the enemy," Carter said. "But we are not going to rest — and that's why you're going to build on those results, continue to take the fight to the enemy, gather more momentum and help deliver ISIL a lasting defeat. I have every confidence that you will."

Stopping ISIL's movements

In Syria, indigenous and coalition forces will work to shut down the last remaining paths for ISIL fighters to move in and out of the country along the border with Turkey, the secretary said.

"In Iraq, we will continue enabling the dedicated Iraqi security forces and Peshmerga led by Prime Minister Haidar al-Abadi and supported by Kurdish Regional President Masoud Barzani — working by, with and through the Iraqi government, as we always have," he said.

U.S. service members will focus on helping Iraqi forces pursue mopping-up operations along the Euphrates River Valley, Carter said.

"In the north, we will continue to help the Iraqi security forces clear the remaining pockets of ISIL control along the Tigris River Valley," he said. "Simultaneously, we will help the Iraqi security forces — including the Kurdish peshmerga — to refit and generate the forces and logistical footprint necessary to isolate and pressure Mosul."

This strategy will culminate in the collapse of ISIL's control over the cities of Mosul in Iraq and Raqqa in Syria, Carter said.

The coalition is doing more in the region with President Barack Obama ordering an additional 560 troops to support Iraqi forces in their offensive to retake Mosul, Carter said.

"Other nations are following our lead, and making commitments, as well," he added. "France is sending back the aircraft carrier Charles de Gaulle to carry out airstrikes against ISIL. Australia will be expanding their training of Iraqi police and border guards, which will be vital for security in Iraq after ISIL's defeat. And the United Kingdom recently announced it would deploy more trainers and engineers to Iraq, as well."

Rebuilding

Taking the territory is the first move, holding it will be crucial, the secretary said.

"There will be towns to rebuild, services to reestablish and communities to restore," Carter said. "Such progress is critical to ensuring that ISIL, once defeated, stays defeated, so that our partners' gains are made irreversible."

The international coalition's stabilization and governance efforts must keep pace with security gains, he said.

"Destroying the fact and the idea of an Islamic state based on ISIL's barbaric ideology will not be easy," Carter said. "The more ground ISIL loses in Iraq and Syria, the more they'll do whatever it takes to cling to their perverse veil of legitimacy."

The coalition must stop ISIL wherever it rears its head, the secretary said.

"We must keep systematically eliminating every key leader we find," he said. "And we must deny them every safe haven, wherever they may seek it — from physical terrain to cyberspace, because that is what's necessary to keep our country safe."

Carter said he knows there will be tough days ahead.

"But we have the right campaign plan, the most capable commanders, motivated partners who are growing in strength, and — most importantly — we have you," he said.

many leadership positions, including team and squad leader, platoon sergeant and operations sergeant major.

Spivey has also served in multiple deployments, including Operation Desert Storm, Operation Iraqi Freedom and Operation Enduring Freedom, as well as deployments to Bosnia and Djibouti.

With his wealth of experience, Spivey said he hopes to be able to follow in the footsteps of the path set forth by his predecessor.

"I've heard it once and I've heard it many times – I have big shoes to fill," said Spivey. "After the past couple of weeks, I see what they mean. I really don't think anyone could come in here and have as large of an impact as you have had. You have done an amazing job, and it shows how much by the amount of respect you get from the people around you and how much they genuinely care for you.

"I may not be able to fill your shoes, but I can certainly walk in the path that you've created," he said. "I will continue where you left off. Fort Rucker has a very distinct history, and as each day passes, I look forward to adding to that history.

Lohmeyer thanked his family, friends and leaders for their support throughout his assignment on Fort Rucker and expressed his vote of confidence in Spivey, as well as a bit of advice.

"Command Sergeant Major Spivey, I envy you," said the outgoing command sergeant major. "You and Gina are about to embark on a job where you don't have to wake the workforce up in the morning and you don't have to tell them (how to do their job) – they just do it all on their own, and all you have to do is walk around and tell them thanks every now and then."

Children

dren and pets in harm's way, that bit of negligence can prove to be a deadly mistake, according to Joy McCormick, social worker with the Fort Rucker New Parent Support Program.

"Most children who are left in a vehicle were not left intentionally," she said. "It is usually a person who is not in the routine of taking a child with them who accidentally forgets about a child in the back seat."

Oftentimes children may fall asleep or not make any noise, causing a person to possibly forget the child is back there, said McCormick, adding that negligence can have deadly consequences.

Since 1990, at least 775 children have died of vehicular heat stroke with 24 deaths having occurred in 2016 alone, according to www.kidsandcars.org.

According to the website, the inside of a vehicle can heat up very quickly on a hot day, even with the windows cracked, reaching temperatures of up to 125 degrees in just minutes.

Many times children are left in cars either because a parent or caregiver may be sleep deprived or exhausted, or decided he or she was going to run into a store for "just a minute," but those minutes can be the difference between life and death for a child or pet left in a car, McCormick said.

"The inside of a car can heat up within seconds of the ignition being turned off, especially in the heat we experience in the South," she said. "A child's body overheats three to five times faster than an adult body, so it doesn't take long for the situation to be life threatening for a child left in a vehicle. Even with the outside temperature in the 60s, the inside of the car can heat up to well over 110 degrees in a matter of minutes."

Death can occur in a matter of minutes if a child is left in a non-running vehicle, said the social worker. The child first becomes dehydrated and then possibly experience heat cramps, which is soon followed by heat exhaustion, which, when untreated, leads to heat stroke. The situation becomes critical if heat exhaustion is reached and not reversed quickly, and can lead to permanent disability such as brain damage and death.

Sometimes people can get distracted or even forgetful of the child being in the car, and McCormick suggests, to help prevent that level of distraction, to leave reminders that the child is in the vehicle.

"It is easy to get distracted," she said. "One thing that is suggested to assist with the situation is to put something that you normally carry with you, such as a name tag, purse, or brief case, in the back seat so you have to open the back door to get it out. This will help remind you of the child in the back seat."

"Or put the diaper bag or a stuffed animal in the front seat beside you so it reminds you of the child in the back seat," said the NPSP social worker. "This is a serious situation. Not only can a child lose its life, but legal charges can be made against the person leaving the child unattended in the car."

McCormick said that it's not always a parent leaving a child in a locked car that leads to vehicular heat stroke, but increasingly it's children who have found themselves entering an unlocked vehicle and not able to get out.

"The child safety locks may be in place and will not allow the door to be re-opened, or the child may not know how to get the shut door open," she said. "It is recommended that you lock your car doors when you get out of it, even in the garage or driveway, and put the keys where children cannot get to them. Never leave a child alone in or around a vehicle, even for a minute."

If a person finds a child in a car unattended and they seem to be at risk, they shouldn't hesitate to get involved, said McCormick. They should get the child out of the car as quickly as possible and call 911 or the local emergency number to get immediate assistance.

an actual shooter on post."

People should expect some short delays at the gates and near Andrews Avenue on Wednesday, but things will be as normal as possible outside the exercise area, he said. Aside from completely shutting down the installation, the exercise will be as real-world as it gets for law enforcement and emergency personnel.

The need for exercises like the active shooter scenario stems from home-grown and foreign terrorist threats, and Worsham said no matter how unlikely a scenario may seem, it's always best to be prepared.

"Terrorists are getting smarter every day and we just want to make sure that we are up on the latest techniques for handling situations like this," he said. "It seems like we learn something new every time.

"Every time we do this, we learn more capabilities from the partners of our mutual aid agreements and what they can do to help us," Worsham said. "With us continuing to do exercises together, it makes us a lot more proficient at what we do."

He added that this is the "perfect time for people to exercise their plans in the event an incident occurs on the installation – remember to make a plan, build a kit and be informed."

12th CAB on display at Farnborough Air Show

12th Combat Aviation Brigade Public Affairs

FARNBOROUGH, England — Soldiers from the 1st Armored Division provided one UH-60M Black Hawk helicopter for the Farnborough Air and Trade show July 11-17 at TAG Farnborough Airport.

Events like the air show at Farnborough provide an excellent opportunity for Soldiers to explain how the 12th Combat Aviation Brigade and the Regionally Allocated Aviation forces operate throughout Europe with America's NATO allies and partner nations.

The 3rd Battalion, 501st Aviation Regiment, 1st Armored Division Combat Aviation Brigade is the current Regionally Allocated Aviation force deployed to Europe in support of the 12th CAB.

Static helicopter displays demonstrate USAREUR's ability to project rotary wing combat power around Europe in an expedient manner. They also serve as a guarantee of the Article 5 obligation to support the Collective Defense of the alliance.

The first five days consisted of a trade show where members of the media and the aviation industry took an up close look at the new UH-60M Black Hawk.

This event then transitioned into a public show where 1st AD Soldiers interacted with the public by explaining how the helicopters, pilots and crew chiefs conduct operations.

"It's nice to see young kids taking an interest in our Black Hawk," said Pvt. Kris Paranteau, a Black Hawk repairer from C Company, 3rd Bn., 501st Avn. Regt., 1st AD CAB. "They were shocked that they actually got to sit in the pilot's seat."

The display also included two Air Force F-16 Fighting Falcon's, a Navy F-18 Super Hornet and a C-27J from the Coast Guard.

Army engineers receive dose of flight-line reality

TUPELO, Miss. — Two U.S. Army Aviation and Missile Research, Development and Engineering Center civilian engineers traveled to Tupelo recently to gain Aviation flight-line experience.

The two-week on-the-job training program allowed Aviation Engineering Directorate employees the opportunity to observe and participate in hands-on maintenance for the AH-64D Apache.

Systems engineer Ashley Erickson and aerospace engineer Gabe Coby completed the Engineer on the Flight Line training program at the Army Aviation Support Facility July 1.

The training program allows engineers to obtain a better understanding of the helicopter system and experience the inspections and services provided to the aircraft on a daily basis, Erickson said.

"I sit behind a desk and write documentation that directly affects Soldiers. I was able to witness firsthand how what I write impacts the maintainers," Erickson said. "It was a great opportunity to follow the maintainers around and help them with everything from daily inspections to unique tear downs."

Participants in the training program actively turn wrenches and perform inspections. The engineers are given a unique perspective on how their

FORT CAMPBELL, Ky. — For nearly 30 years, Chinook pilots at Fort Campbell have honed their skills at the Flight Simulations Branch on 58th Street, using the CH-47D flight simulator, Model 2B31.

Many have logged hours on the large, motion-based machine, refining capabilities, such as flying qualities, flight paths and radio communication. The machine is well-maintained and fully-operational.

However, as the Army moves along the path of technological advances, mobility and cost effectiveness have become bigger parts of the equation in simulation-based training, said Steve Zuercher, chief of the training support center.

The CH-47D simulator, one of only three still remaining Armywide, was officially retired at the end of December. To commemorate the occasion, instructors, maintenance crews and aviators, past and present, gathered Dec. 16 for a

C-5s are capable of transporting four helicopters at a time.

Staff Sgt. Aaron Westcott, 601st ASB, said the HH-60Ms were flown out to Salina from Fort Riley where the Soldiers prepared them for transportation by securing parts and folding in the blades prior to loading them onto the aircraft. The preparation at Salina varied some from the Soldiers' previous training, but still went according to plan.

"It's a little different because we didn't do it at the location where the aircraft initially were, but the movement is going really smoothly in my opinion," Westcott said.

To prepare, Soldiers began training months ago and performing a number of different exercises to avoid mishaps, Lt. Col. Aaron McPeake, 601st ASB commander, said.

"We've done a couple training exercises over the past couple months to prepare for this," McPeake said. "It's a very tough mission. It's a lot of precision, making sure you get all the parts and pieces into the proper position."

Through continued training, the Soldiers have also decreased the time required and perfected their technique in preparing and loading the aircraft for transport, McPeake said.

"The first one took about an hour and a half," McPeake said. "Now they are done anywhere between 40 and 50 minutes. It's like a NASCAR pit crew -- they keep getting faster and faster."

Once the helicopters were prepared, Soldiers and Airmen worked together to load them onto the C-5 using a tether, pulley system and manual labor to carefully guide each aircraft into place. Two Soldiers were perched on top of the helicopter to mind the blades as they were moving through the plane.

Capt. Andrew Petefish, 601st ASB, said the teamwork between the Soldiers and Airmen -- not just while loading the aircraft, but at all times -- is vital to the success of the mission.

"We need them to deploy," Petefish said. "We're a joint environment right now, so anytime we can build relations with our partners (it) is a good idea."

McPeake echoed Petefish's opinion, and added the load out provided valuable experience for future operations for the Soldiers and Airmen involved.

"We're all one team -- we have to work together," McPeake said. "We all wear the uniform. And it's a good opportunity for us to get some loading experience and we'll probably continue to do this over the next year."

While a majority of the preparation work was done at Fort Riley, the aircraft needed to be loaded at Salina due to the larger runway available there, McPeake said.

Fort Riley makes use of many of the neighboring airports in Kansas, Scot Bird, Fort Riley installation transportation officer, said. Salina and Topeka are able to accommodate larger body aircraft and Manhattan can handle smaller body aircraft, putting Fort Riley in an advantageous position for operations.

"We can go any way we need to go for deployments," Bird said.

Bird said the use of Topeka, Manhattan and Salina airports comes from an initiative by the Kansas Governor's Military Council to provide support to military installations across Kansas.

McPeake said he appreciated the support of the Salina Regional Airport and emphasized the value of continued relations between Fort Riley and the neighboring airports.

"The Salina airport has been nothing but accommodating," McPeake said. "For us to be able to occupy a hangar, use this office, use the facilities -- it's been absolutely fantastic."

Engineers

decisions affect the personnel on the flight-line and in the maintenance hangar.

"When field issues come up, we as engineers are trying to solve those problems for the Soldiers, but we don't have the hands-on understanding of what it takes to complete a task," Cody said.

Cody said they can look at a part or a drawing and give recommendations on a solution, but without hands-on experience, they won't have a complete grasp of the problem or the time it requires to complete the inspection or task.

Direct involvement with inspections and maintenance actions provide the engineers with an opportunity to make better decisions when analyzing maintenance data and providing feedback to the Apache Project Office.

"Working hand in hand with the National Guard has been an eye-opening experience for me," Erickson said. "We had great communication and we received recommendations on how we can improve our documentation."

Cody concurred with Erickson and said, "It's amazing how something on paper can be a major burden to the Soldier if you don't have an understanding of all the extra labor that goes into a task. I learned even if the document says, 'change the oil filter,' that simple task may not be so simple to complete."

AED leaders hope to continue the program as funding allows.

small ceremony to bid farewell to the machine.

"It's been here almost 30 years and it's trained a lot of people," Zuercher said. "When this is gone, there will be only two left. And they'll all be gone by (the end of this year)."

Zuercher said that Fort Campbell already has the simulator that will take its place -- a mobile unit that was moved to Joint Base Lewis-McChord, Washington, but will make its way back to the installation this month.

Mobility, according to Zuercher, is the name of the game in today's simulation program.

"This one here is a permanently-installed simulator -- you can't move it," he said. "You would have to dismantle the entire thing to move it. The other simulators they have now are mobile and they can be kept outside. There's a big difference."

Marking the importance of the Chinook helicopter and the subsequent training afforded by the flight simulator, training instructor Matt Page shared a bit of history with the gathering at the Flight Simulations Branch. Most notably, he cited the evolution of the Chinook from 1962 to 1979, with models ranging from A to D. The D model became the Army standard in 1979, and stayed the standard until the first F model was issued in 2007 -- an impressive feat in the constantly evolving world of military machinery.

"Anybody that knows the future of Army helicopters knows that the future vertical lift program is set to start removing all of the helicopters we're familiar with in the year 2030," Page said. "It's estimated that the Chinook will probably stay in service and could actually make 100 years of service to the United States Army with the way it's going now."

As flight technology evolved, so did the technology with which to train the Aviators. It began in 1968, when the Army determined that it was technologically feasible to build a Synthetic Flight Training System. With this technology, new pilots could practice difficult maneuvers safely and effectively.

"In 1972, the UH-1 simulators were put in here at Fort Campbell," Page said.

Following the success of flight simulation training, plans were drawn up for the Flight Simulations Branch building in 1979, assisted by Richard Houde, who would become the first branch chief. In 1982, the first simulator was installed with a CH-47 C cockpit, which paid for itself in saved Army spending within two years' time. In 1987, the C Model was retired after 11,434 hours of flight time and the simulator was converted to a CH-47 D.

"The total compilation of the flight hours of the cockpit, with the C and D model time together, is 55,234 hours," Page said. "It would take six aircraft to actually make that number because they only fly about 10,000 miles on each airframe. Everybody that's here has a little part in that."

Houde, who played a big part in the upstart of the Flight Simulations Branch, commemorated his visit by heading into the simulator with Page for a final virtual flight over the installation. Although he has been retired for 20 years, his 28 years of flying experience proved to be like second nature as he manned the controls.

"I'm getting old," Houde said with a laugh. "Everything I can fly is either in the boneyard or at the museum. I've been retired for 20 years, so I'm definitely out of that picture now. But I'm glad they invited me."

Houde acknowledged that times are changing, but that the evolution of simulation training is a positive step for the Army of today and tomorrow.

"They're modernizing, and going to different devices that are less expensive to build and to run," he said. "But you can practice things that you cannot practice in the aircraft because it's too dangerous. There's a tremendous amount of benefits and you have a better-trained pilot when you're done."

"Aviation has owned much of the simulation training history in the Army," Zuercher explained. "But things are changing. Now we're going to see these buildings used for different things -- engagement skills trainers and a universal mission simulator."

As the Army changes the technology to become mobile and, most importantly, interoperable, Zuercher said that it is important to remember the origins of the lifesaving and cost-effective training provided by simulators.

"I hope everybody can appreciate what this simulator had meant to the Army and where simulation training is going, and how things are evolving month-by-month," he said.

POKEMON GO!

Playing safely, responsibly key to avoiding trouble on post

By Nathan Pfau
Army Flier Staff Writer

With “Pokémon Go!” sweeping the nation and causing people to rush to “catch ‘em all,” missing out on capturing a rare Pokémon may be the least of some of players’ worries – some may end up caught themselves for security or distracted driving violations.

Installation officials and law enforcement have seen an influx in calls due to suspicious persons and activity around post, only to respond and find that it’s an individual on the hunt for their favorite Pokémon, which can be a huge waste of time and resources for law enforcement, according to Marcel Dumais, Fort Rucker chief of police.

“We’ve observed on post that Soldiers and family members are out in areas and facilities that are closed during hours of darkness, and they’re out in the roadways and parking lots trying to catch these Pokémon,” he said. “That, in and of itself, poses some serious problems, not in just that they can be struck by a vehicle, but passersby who see them out there could mistake them for a suspicious person or suspicious activity, then they call us and we respond to the call and when we get there we find that it’s someone playing the game.”

Pokémon Go! is an interactive, location-based, augmented-reality game that people play on their smartphones that require them to venture to different locations in their area in order to capture different Pokémon characters. There are hundreds of characters to be captured, so in order to “catch ‘em all,” as the game’s catchphrase goes, people must venture all over.

But some may find themselves

in areas they shouldn’t be in.

Dumais said so far there have been upwards of 15 people that law enforcement have encountered in areas where facilities are closed.

In addition to capturing the different Pokémon, there are also “gyms” that people can visit where they can battle their Pokémon with other people, as well as “Poké Stops” that people can visit to get in-game items, all of which could have players venturing into locations at the wrong time.

“When we receive these calls it puts us on a high state of alert,” said Dumais, adding that it’s not just a problem on Fort Rucker, but across all installations.

In addition to people being in places they shouldn’t be, Dumais said there is also an issue with people playing the game while driving, which can pose serious risks to themselves, other drivers and pedestrians.

Fort Rucker is a hands-free installation, meaning that people are not allowed to utilize their phones unless they are able to through a Bluetooth connection or other hands-free method, said the police chief.

“When people are playing the game, they have to employ the smartphone when they’re trying to capture these characters,” said Dumais. “You have to hold your phone in such a manner that you’re attempting to capture this character, so there really is no way for you to operate your vehicle (and play the game) because you have to be able to manipulate your phone in order to play the game.”

People caught using their phones while driving will be hit with a $60 fine, or worse, they could end up injuring themselves or someone else due to distracted driving, said the police chief. Additionally, people playing the game while on foot should also pay attention to where they are walking.

Another issue that Pokémon Go! poses for people playing on the installation is that since they must interact with the phone and their environment, oftentimes it can look like they are taking photos with their phone, which in many areas is prohibited, said Dumais.

“We have restricted areas where people aren’t supposed to be taking photos around the installation, and that becomes an issue for force protection,” he said. “Whether they are taking a picture or not, it appears as though they are (when playing the game). When we see that, we’re going to stop and encounter the person and let them know that they can’t be taking photos around those areas, and the potential exists that if I’m not able to delete the photos off of their phone then I’ll have to seize their phone until those photos are deleted.”

In addition to the risks of being stopped by law enforcement, some players could possibly find themselves stopped by some other unsavory characters.

Dumais said there can be criminals who are using the game to target unsuspecting players, and there have been instances where people have been robbed while visiting different gyms or Poké Stops. Since these locations require people to visit them in the actual physical world, it’s easy for people to be targeted when visiting these locations during after-hours or alone.

“There are some bad people out there also playing these games who know where these gyms and things are, and when most people go there for the express purpose of playing the game they’re probably not focusing on their surroundings,” said the police chief. “There have been cases we’ve heard about where people have been robbed in those areas because not everyone out there playing the game might be friendly towards you.”

“We caution people to be very careful when they’re playing the game and remain focused on their surroundings,” he said. “Don’t go to places that aren’t well lit and don’t go alone. People’s own self-preservation is important when playing the game.”

People should be having fun when playing the game, but they should also be playing the game safely, said Dumais.

“Commanders and directors should discuss the issue with their Soldiers, civilian employees and family members, and ask them to make sure that if they’re playing the game to do so safely and responsibly, especially if they’re on Fort Rucker,” he said.

GIVING BACK

DFMWR, commissary partner to help ‘Feds Feed Families’

By Jeremy Henderson
Army Flier Staff Writer

Federal employees donated more than 17 million pounds of food to feed families in need last year – a more than 3-million-pound increase over the previous year – and the Fort Rucker Directorate of Family, Morale, Welfare and Recreation hopes to help make this year’s effort even more successful.

Once again, the commissary will provide donation drop-off locations where potential contributors purchase their own food.

Additional donation drop-off locations include the Fort Rucker Physical Fitness Center on Andrews Avenue, Fortenberry-Colton PFC on Skychief Street and the Soldier Service Center, Bldg. 5700.

“It’s a one-stop shop,” said Aida Stallings, DFMWR community recreation division business manager. “Patrons can buy groceries for their home and donate to a home that is in need at the same time.”

Food items needed for the campaign include:

- Canned vegetables — low sodium, no salt;
- Canned fruits — in light syrup or its own juices;
- Canned proteins — tuna, salmon, chicken, peanut butter and beans;
- Soups — beef stew, chili, chicken noodle, turkey or chili;
- Noodles — tomato-based sauces, light soy sauce, ketchup, mustard, salad dressing or oils;
- Snacks — individually packed snacks, crackers, trail mix, dried fruit, granola and cereal bars, pretzels and sandwich crackers;
- Multigrain cereal;

- 100-percent juice — all sizes, including juice boxes; and
- Grains — brown and white rice, oatmeal, bulgur, quinoa, couscous, pasta, and macaroni and cheese.

The campaign runs through Aug. 31, according to Stallings.

“The purpose is to provide assistance all year long,” she said. “This specific drive is only during the summer months. It is the norm for communities to donate during the holiday seasons, but sometimes we forget that the need is year round. This drive helps to keep those food lockers supplied during the summer months.”

Patrons may also purchase pre-filled bags at the commissary for $5 and $10. Each bag purchased directly benefits local families in need.

According to Stallings, all donations are delivered to local food banks and will benefit families throughout the Wiregrass.

“We contact Wiregrass United Way when we have a load for them,” she said. “They will come to Fort Rucker and pick up as many times as needed. The food is taken to the food lockers and distributed as needed.”

Since the campaign began in 2009, federal workers have donated and collected nearly 57.2 million pounds of food and other non-perishable items to support families across America, according to a Feds Feed Families press release. More than 85 percent of federal workers live and work outside the Washington, D.C., area, so communities are being helped in every state. In 2013, employees collected nearly 9 million pounds of food and more than 14 million in 2014.

Army seeks NCOs for out-of-the-ordinary enlisted aide assignments

By David Ruderman
U.S. Army Human Resources
Command Public Affairs

FORT KNOX, Kentucky — Up-and-coming NCOs interested in a rare career-broadening assignment have until Sept. 8 to submit application packets for the Enlisted Aide Program.

The program is open to all active-component enlisted Soldiers in the ranks of sergeant (promotable) through master sergeant, regardless of military occupational specialty, said Master Sgt. Christian Price, U.S. Army Human Resources Command enlisted aide professional development NCO.

Enlisted aides serve on the personal staff of a general officer and undertake a wide array of day-to-day tasks that free the officer to concentrate on his or her primary military and official duties. In practical terms, that can include maintaining quarters, uniforms and military personal equipment; serving as the quarters point of contact; conducting official social functions; and preparing daily meals.

A selection panel will convene Sept. 13 to review applications and select the best qualified Soldiers. Publication of the selectee list is planned for early November, Price said.

The call for applications is explained in a Military Personnel Message issued June 30 by HRC's Force Sustainment Division, which can be accessed on the web at www.hrc.army.mil (CAC or DSLogon access required). Detailed eligibility requirements, helpful program information and a completed model packet can be viewed on the general officer EAP web page at <http://go.usa.gov/xCFhh>.

Prospective applicants should pay particular attention to the relevant eligibility criteria and take advantage of the personal statement section to expand on their talents and strengths, said Price.

"I would recommend that the Soldier definitely take advantage of the personal statement, captivate the panel to say, 'This is not just what I am going to do, but this is what I can provide to the team.' And the writing is also very important because, as we all are aware with the new NCOER, NCOs have to focus more on writing skills. It's a skill that the panel can take a look at and say, 'This NCO has what it takes,'" he said.

Selected Soldiers who have not attended the Enlisted Aide Training Course or the Advanced Culinary Skills Training Course at Fort Lee, Virginia, will be scheduled for training. Selected candidates outside the primary MOS of 92G will also attend the Basic Culinary Course, said Price.

"What will happen is, when the service member gets selected by the panel, we are going to get them into the training as soon as possible. We will give them training before they are selected by a general officer. That's the intent," he said.

Once required training is complete, the selected NCOs will be added to the enlisted aide personnel management ready pool, which is managed by the Department of the Army Staff.

"They oversee the program," said Price.

Those selected for assignment to a general officer will be assigned by Quartermaster Branch to fill an Additional Skill Identifier, ASI Z5, Enlisted Aide, position. Incidentally, the 92-G MOS, formerly known as food specialist, has been officially re-titled as culinary specialist since Oct. 1 of last year, Price said.

Assigned enlisted aides incur a two-year service obligation, which can be extended an additional year based on the needs of the Army. Assignments may be at the one-star through four-star level at commands across the tactical, operational and strategic spectrum of the force.

Those who successfully complete their EA tour will return to their original branch for an operational Army assignment. That is designed to ensure their leadership and MOS proficiency skill sets are maintained, an additional benefit to the Army of the broadening experience, Price said.

The EAP includes NCOs from the Army's sister services too, giving Soldiers a joint training experience that empowers them to exercise and integrate their strategic, tactical and operational capabilities. It can prepare the select few – there are a total of 81 Department of Defense authorized billets across the Army – for enhanced leadership roles going forward, he said.

"That's very selective. When looking at the Total Soldier concept, I think that if you place a Soldier in the EA community, it's going to make that NCO a lot smarter. You are training the Soldier to be a 'three-headed' type of a leader: strategically sound, tactically smart and, most importantly, operationally ready to tackle anything.

"Coming out of the program you will be able to function in so many different organizations, you are going to be an automatic asset. It's genius," Price said.

Soldiers who complete their

EA assignments may return to the program after their follow-on operational tour by submitting another application packet and being selected for the candidate pool. Candidates who were not selected by previous panels may re-submit their packets for review. Soldiers who have a service remaining requirement for a bonus do not qualify to apply for EAP, with the exception of 92-Gs, who are exempt from that rule, he said.

Price said there is one other major caveat: only NCOs who apply will be considered. So Soldiers who are interested should do their research and preparation now to meet the Sept. 8 application deadline. He encouraged interested NCOs to contact him directly with questions or concerns.

"Just from my own professional experience, I think it's more relational if the Soldier can talk to someone who has been in the job. They are more receptive to listening to how they can be successful," he said.

Program aids military members, civilian employees with disabilities

Department of Defense News
Staff Report

WASHINGTON — July 26 marked the 26th anniversary of the Americans with Disabilities Act – the landmark civil rights legislation that has removed barriers for millions of Americans and serves as a gold standard around the world.

On the anniversary, the Computer/Electronic Accommodations Program, an initiative through which the Defense Department offers free assistive technology devices to support military personnel and federal employees with disabilities, provided its 13,000th device of the current fiscal year. The previous record of 12,777 was reached in 2014.

"We simply couldn't have planned a more fitting way to celebrate this record-breaking milestone and the ADA anniversary," said Stephen M. King, CAP director. "As a resource for reasonable accommodations and assistive technology, we are passionate about ensuring that military and civilian personnel have the tools they need to maximize their job performance. The timing is impeccable."

The growing need for CAP services, he said, coincides with increased hiring of individuals with disabilities within the DOD and throughout the federal government.

"My staff and resources are being pushed to the limit," King said. "Thanks to the support of DOD's leadership, we have been able meet the challenge, just as our customers prove they can in service to our nation every single day."

Established in 1990, CAP is the largest centrally-funded reasonable accommodation program in the federal government and the largest assistive technology program in the world. To date, more than 165,000 assistive technology solutions have been provided to more than 67,000 CAP customers.

WHITE HOUSE:

Veteran homelessness drops nearly 50 percent since 2010

White House
News Release

WASHINGTON — The Housing and Urban Development and Veterans Affairs departments, and the U.S. Interagency Council on Homelessness announced Monday that the number of veterans experiencing homelessness in the United States has been cut nearly in half since 2010.

White House officials said data shows a 17-percent decrease in veteran homelessness between January 2015 and January 2016 – quadruple the previous year’s annual decline – and a 47-percent decrease since 2010.

Through HUD’s annual Point-in-Time estimate of America’s homeless population, communities across the country reported that fewer than 40,000 veterans were experiencing homelessness on a given night in January 2016, officials said. The January 2016 estimate found slightly more than 13,000 unsheltered homeless veterans living on their streets, a 56 percent decrease since 2010.

This progress is a result of partnerships among HUD, VA, USICH, and other federal, state and local partners. These partnerships were sparked by the 2010 launch of Opening Doors, the first strategic plan to prevent and end homelessness, officials said. The initiative’s success among veterans can also be attributed to the effectiveness of the HUD-VA Supportive Housing program, which combines HUD rental assistance with case management and clinical services provided by the VA, they added. Since 2008, more than 85,000 vouchers have been awarded and more than 114,000 homeless veterans have been served through the HUD-VASH program.

“We have an absolute duty to ensure those who’ve worn our nation’s uniform have a place to call home,” HUD Secretary Julian Castro said. “While we’ve made remarkable progress toward ending veteran homelessness, we still have work to do to make certain we answer the call of our veterans, just as they answered the call of our nation.”

“The dramatic decline in veteran homelessness reflects the power of partnerships in solving complex national problems on behalf of those who have served our nation,” VA Secretary Robert A. McDonald said. “The men and women who have fought for this nation should not have to fight to keep a roof over their head, and I’m pleased that VA is serving more veterans than ever before with health care, education, job training and wraparound supportive services. While this is very real progress that means tens of thousands more veterans have a place to call home, we will not rest until every veteran in need is permanently housed.”

“Together, we are proving that it is possible to solve one of the most complex challenges our country faces,” said Matthew Doherty, the executive director of the U.S. Interagency Council on Homelessness. “This progress should give us confidence that when we find new ways to work together and when we set bold goals and hold ourselves accountable, nothing is unsolvable.”

Accelerating Progress

In 2014, First Lady Michelle Obama launched the Mayors Challenge to End Veteran

Homelessness with the goal of accelerating progress toward the national goal of ending veteran homelessness. More than 880 mayors, governors, and other local officials have joined the challenge and committed to ending veteran homelessness in their communities, White House officials said. To date, 27 communities and two states have effectively ended veteran homelessness, serving as models for others across the nation, they added.

HUD and VA have a wide range of programs that prevent and end homelessness among veterans, including health care, housing solutions, job training and education. In fiscal year 2015, these programs helped more than 157,000 people – including 99,000 veterans and 34,000 children – secure or remain in permanent housing, officials said. Since 2010, more than 360,000 veterans and their families have been permanently housed, rapidly rehoused or prevented from becoming homeless through programs administered by HUD and VA.

More information about VA’s homeless programs is available at <http://www.va.gov/homeless/>. More information about HUD’s programs is available at http://portal.hud.gov/hudportal/HUD?src=/program_offices/comm_planning/homeless, or by calling the HUDVET National Hotline at (877) 424-3838. Veterans who are homeless or at imminent risk of becoming homeless should contact their local VA medical center and ask to speak to a homeless coordinator or call 1-877-4AID-VET.

FORT HOOD, Texas — Be very afraid when Spike bares his silver fangs. He is on point, ready to do what he loves best: bite.

Several months ago, the 3-year-old military police dog's dual-mission career was threatened when his fractured canines — the result of a nasty cage-biting habit — became a liability. Without those fangs, Spike would lose the grab and puncture offensive skills required of police working dogs.

As a result, the San Angelo-based Airman was issued a no-bite profile that took him off the police beat, although he continued with his sniffing duties.

Today, thanks to the collaborative efforts of Carl R. Darnall Army Medical Center and Department of Army medical specialists who recently repaired and strengthened Spikes' weaponry with root canals and crowns, the K9 has a ferocious new bite.

Because the military's working dog training program is extremely difficult and intense, the graduation rate is low. Spike is one of the elite few, which is why saving his teeth became a priority for Capt. Dawn Hull, who, as chief, North Texas Branch, Public Health Command District-Hood, manages the medical care of all North Texas military working dogs, including those at Fort Hood.

"Spike is very special. He is a well-trained service member and we did not want to lose him," said Hull.

When the veterinarian first examined Spike, she was alarmed by the multiple fractures and missing teeth, especially considering his age.

"It was hard to determine the cause, but there was an indication something was going on," said Hull, whose other clients have included a short stint with the Navy's mine-detection dolphins in southern California, U.S. Capitol police dogs in Washington, D.C., and the 36 equines at Fort Hood's 1st Cavalry Horse Detachment. "If there was any pulp exposure, it would lead to further dental disease and possibly end Spike's career."

To further evaluate Spike, Hull enlisted the help of her battle buddies: the Dental Command's forensic portable radiology unit and the endodontic and cosmetic dentistry skills of Lt. Col. Edward Lumpkins. The team also included several members from CRDAMC's anesthesiology department.

"Lieutenant Colonel Lumpkins brought out some tricks that we did not know could even be done," she said, adding how grateful she is for his "doggie dental wizardry."

"I never thought I would be performing dentist procedures on non-humans," said Lumpkins, following the five-hour surgery. "I was honored to help Spike because these dogs are out there on the battlefield risking their lives just like our Soldiers. You just cannot ask them to go downrange to do their job if they are having some type of dental issue. They deserve our help."

Lumpkins, who prepared for the May 5 procedure by studying dog anatomy books, also was surprised at the condition of Spike's teeth.

"For a dog that young, his teeth have been pretty abused," said the former artilleryman turned dentist.

According to Hull, military working dogs have a lot of drive and anxiety and will often resort to chewing when they are kennelled because they would rather be working, a sentiment echoed by Air Force Staff Sgt. Zachary Cornwell, Spike's trainer and handler.

"The problem with Spike is that his drive is so strong that when he is not working, he is biting his cage," said Cornwell, who is assigned to Goodfellow Air Force Base's 17th Security Squadron. "It is part of a German Shepherd's primary drive."

Although the dual-mission dog continued with his explosive-detection duties, the threat of Spike losing his teeth and becoming a single-mission dog worried Cornwell.

"Spike's aggression issues might be a problem because of his drive and that would become more of an issue in detection work," he said, adding that all Spike wants to do is work. "He would rather be hunting instead of detecting."

Spike came to Goodfellow in February 2015 directly from the military working dog training program at Lackland Air Force Base, Texas. Ten months later, Spike became Cornwell's sidekick.

"Since then, we have developed a very strong bond. He would do anything to protect me," Cornwell said, adding that the joy of being a dog handler is molding that four-legged new recruit into a model Airman. "Military working dogs are a direct reflection of the handler. They come to us with the basic knowledge and then it is our job to train our dog, which really requires a lot of thinking outside the box."

That is why Spike is special to not only Cornwell, but to the Army and to the CRDAMC team.

"This was all about mission readiness," said Hull. "We had a lot of experts come together for Spike to ensure he gets the best possible treatment. He is very young and doing well. Hopefully, he has a long career ahead of him."

Cornwell said he is extremely grateful to Hull and her medical team of volunteers for their dedication to saving Spike's career.

"It is so awesome that so many people came together to help Spike," said Cornwell. "It really means a lot that he was well taken care of because, as a dog handler, Spike is my priority. He really is a good dog with a good heart. He was bred into this line of work, so he deserves only the very best care."

COLORFULLY FIT

Color Run returns after record-setting 2015 debut

By Jeremy Henderson
Army Flier Staff Writer

After a record-setting inaugural race in 2015, Fort Rucker Physical Fitness Center will host the 2016 Color Run Aug. 20.

Nearly 850 people signed up and ran in the 2015 Color Run. The event garnered so much attention that extra time was needed for registration and the run route was adjusted to accommodate the extra runners.

This year's race begins at 8 a.m. at the Fort Rucker Festival Fields. Registration will be 7-7:45 a.m.

Lynn Avila, Fort Rucker fitness program coordinator, hopes this year's event will see even more runners covered from head to toe in a variety of colors.

"It is the perfect opportunity for individuals, couples and families to have active outdoor fun," she said. "The event is not timed, so there is no pressure to compete or worry about when you finish — just have fun.

"We want participants to feel as though they've accomplished something — because they have," she said. "Getting up off the couch and stepping outside to be active is highly beneficial, especially as a family. Participating in a community event like this can improve the rest of your day and help you meet new people."

According to Avila, runners who participated in last year's event offered only high praise.

"Everyone smiled and laughed," she said. "There's just something about running through clouds of bright colors and getting covered from head to toe that takes you back to being a kid." Embracing one's youth, Avila said, is precisely why families are urged to bring their children to the event.

"All ages are welcome and encouraged to attend," she said. "There will be no separate fun run because we consider this entire event a fun run. Feed the kids a nutritious breakfast and bring them to run through clouds of color. They'll have a blast and you will, too."

The run is a 2-mile event that will feature color stations set up along the course. The stations will feature different colors made up of corn starch that will be thrown by volunteers onto runners as they pass. Participants are encouraged to wear white to get as colorful as possible. T-shirts for sale through MWR are white with a splash of color on the front.

The race will begin at the festival fields between the two fields and turn right onto Andrews Avenue. It will then turn left onto Gladiator Street and around Third Avenue back to Andrews Avenue and then a right between the two festival fields.

The cost is $15 with no T-shirt for individuals, or $20 with a T-shirt included now though Aug.

15. The cost with a T-shirt Aug. 15 through race day is $25, while supplies last.

When all participants have crossed the finish line, everyone will gather with a cup full of color and toss it in the air for maximum color coverage. This is the color explosion and patrons are encouraged to have their cameras ready to capture a shot of the color coming down, Avila said.

People can register at either physical fitness center or MWR Central in Bldg. 5700. Participants are encouraged to register early. Children under age 12 may run for free. Refreshments, including popsicles, water and sports drinks, will be provided and the event is open to the public. There will also be a free bounce house and music, Avila said.

Anyone who does not possess a Department of Defense identification card must obtain a gate access pass. Visitors may obtain passes from the visitor control centers at the Daleville and Ozark gates. The Daleville VCC is open 8 a.m. to 4 p.m., Mondays through Sundays. The Ozark VCC is open 8 a.m. to 4 p.m., Mondays through Fridays.

BRAIN MATTER

Neuroscience advances could boost battlefield performance

By David Vergun
Army News Service

ABERDEEN PROVING GROUND, Md. — Advances in brain science could lead to improvements in performance and decision making, changing the way Soldiers fight in the near future.

The improvements could include increased effectiveness in detecting and engaging the enemy and increased alertness while driving through the battlespace, according to Dr. Jean Vettel, a neuroscientist at Army Research Laboratory who spoke during a media day July 28.

For the last seven years, Vettel's team has been running experiments to gain a better understanding of the individual differences in brain patterns that could lead to future capabilities for Soldiers in the 2040 time-frame.

During her team's experiments, her researchers have been examining brain patterns using an electroencephalogram, or EEG, which records voltage fluctuations in different parts of the brain through sensors placed on a person's head.

Test subjects who are hooked up to an EEG and other sensors drive around, either in a car simulator or a real car, while data is collected on their brain patterns. Researchers sometimes measure multitasking by introducing a car passenger to talk to the driver, Vettel said.

Brain patterns are formed by activated neural pathways linking various regions of the brain, but active neural connections can vary among people performing the same activity. For example, while pathways to one person's object recognition region may be active, those to the language skills region of another person's brain may be active.

The idea behind Vettel's research is to build a database on the brain patterns of individuals and groups that will enable researchers to predict how Soldiers will drive in both a proactive state and in a reactive state, she said.

A proactive state is where a driver has good situational awareness of the road, an awareness that allows him to stay in his or her lane, for instance. A reactive state is when a driver must react to a situation, such as when a driver misses an exit and must come up with a new strategy, she said.

Researchers are beginning to use the database they have developed based on their experiments to predict both types of driving performance, she said.

In future experiments, her researchers might induce fatigue or sleep deprivation in the safety of the simulator, she said. Later, they will examine the brain patterns of Soldiers on patrol.

What's this driving at?

While Vettel is involved only in basic research, not applied research, the knowledge her team has gained through their experiments has a good likelihood of transitioning to prototype testing in the decades ahead.

Imagine a squad of Soldiers is on dismounted patrol in enemy territory, she said. They are monitoring for suspicious activity as part of their situational awareness. A Soldier may have an inkling of possible danger, but that almost subconscious feeling hasn't yet reached the threat threshold so no warning is given to the platoon.

Now, imagine that EEG-like sensors have been embedded in the Soldier's helmet or clothing. If several other Soldiers have the same inkling, the sensors could detect that and transmitters could convey a threat alert to them or to their commanders back in headquarters.

Drivers in a convoy could similarly have sensors that could detect drowsiness or inattentiveness, she speculated.

Alternatively, if the vehicle is an autonomous vehicle, sensors monitoring the brain patterns of the Soldier inside the vehicle could alert him or her that the autonomous vehicle is about to do something dangerous and it could turn the driving over to the Soldier, she said, calling the proposed system the "shared control model."

Eventually, Vettel said she would like her researchers to use non-invasive sensors to monitor Soldiers all day doing a variety of tasks, which would dramatically increase the data they collect.

In Afghanistan, top enlisted adviser advocates tough fitness training

By Lisa Ferdinando
Department of Defense News

KABUL, Afghanistan — "Come on, sergeant major, let me see those cartwheels!" reverberated through the fitness center during an early morning, intense workout session led by the senior noncommissioned officer in the U.S. military.

After prodding Command Sgt. Maj. David M. Clark about those flips, Command Sgt. Maj. John Wayne Troxell quickly shifted his rallying cry away from the Resolute Support/U.S. Forces Afghanistan senior enlisted leader to another Soldier.

"No choking up on those sledgehammers, Clements," Troxell yelled out to Command Sgt. Maj. Michael Clements, the senior enlisted leader at Combined Security Transition Command Afghanistan, who was lifting, twisting and holding the weighted tool over his head.

"You have to train hard, because our enemies are training hard," bellowed Troxell, the senior enlisted adviser to the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, in the training session at the Resolute Support headquarters in the Afghan capital here.

Troxell accompanied his boss, Marine Corps Gen. Joe Dunford, on a July 15-17 visit to assess the mission to train, advise and assist Afghan forces.

"The battlefield is dynamic," Troxell said after a high-intensity, sweat-inducing circuit session that included jumps, core strength and weight training.

These types of daily vigorous training sessions go beyond one's comfort zone and have a singular focus: to keep troops ready for the enemy, he said.

Service members must be agile and flexible in the battlefield, where they scale walls, navigate rough terrain, work in extreme temperatures, and carry heavy loads over long distances, Troxell said, so the workouts need to mimic situations the troops could face on a mission.

"We have to have the reserve to be able to defeat the enemy when we get on the objective or we come under attack," Troxell said. "We have to train under conditions that are harsh, brutal and extreme, so that our minds, our bodies and our souls are prepared for that kind of fight."

Explaining his "PME Hard" philosophy, Troxell detailed the importance of a holistic focus to be

ART OF RECOVERY

Traumatic brain injury patients paint, sculpt way to recovery

By Shannon Collins
Department of Defense News

(Editor's note: This is the third in a five-part series on the National Intrepid Center of Excellence in Bethesda, Maryland.)

WASHINGTON — As the brushes touch the canvas, the service members pour their thoughts and emotions onto the page, expressing what they haven't been able to talk about through art.

Like the elements of a painting, doctors from each specialty at the National Intrepid Center of Excellence, a directorate of Walter Reed National Military Medical Center in Bethesda, Maryland, come together to help service members with traumatic brain injuries in an intensive four-week therapy program.

Specialties such as neurology use art to assist with sleep and migraines. Family care physicians can use it to assist with physical ailments. Psychiatrists and nutritionists can assist with medications and vitamins, and art therapists can provide emotional support.

The masks

Melissa Walker, a registered art therapist and healing arts program coordinator at NICOE, said the patients begin their group art therapy session by making masks.

"It's in this session that I have to explain to them that I'm giving them the means to express and symbolize whatever they would like to about their identities and things they've been through," she said. "I tell them not to worry about the product, but what they would like to express — what story they want to tell — and usually that resonates with them."

She said the patients usually dive in. Even if they were skeptical in the beginning, she added, at the end of the first session, many of them say, "That was really relaxing. I can't believe I was able to open up about that specific element of my personality."

Walker said the masks give the patients "a visual voice to their invisible pain or their invisible wounds." They create the masks in a two-hour group art therapy session and will see them again throughout the four weeks they are at NICOE.

For one sailor, Walker said, the mask project held a special meaning. He had flashbacks for seven years about a bloody face from when he had been injured in a bunker during a mortar attack. He told Walker he had seen the face staring back at him and that it haunted him. He called it

"BFIB" for short: bloody face in bunker.

Some patients leave their masks behind to inspire other patients, he said, and when he saw them on the wall, he immediately thought of making a BFIB mask.

"He made BFIB in that session, and instead of thinking of him as something psychologically inside of him, it took on a form of an actual product," Walker said. "So when he thought about (BFIB), he thought of him sitting in the art therapy studios safe and contained, because he would leave him every day behind," Walker said. "Eventually, we placed it in a box and contained the mask, and he said after the entire process (that) he rarely saw the flashback, and it didn't make him feel anxious, because he knew he was here in this space, safe and contained."

Other art forms

Walker said the patients can use water colors, acrylics, Keva blocks and in some cases, oil. Marine Corps Staff Sgt. Tony Mannino, a former NICOE patient, preferred water colors.

"I chose to work with water colors because it makes it very hard to get the fine details perfect for someone who has struggled with perfectionism and has always been in control of any situation," the former administrator and machine gunner said. "It really helped me to release and relinquish the reins, to let the colors do what they were going to do on their own."

He said painting helped bring up different issues about what was going on in his mind, both recently and from his deployment to Iraq in 2007 and 2008.

"I spoke to the art therapist about things that I didn't even talk to my psychologist about, so it's really interesting what happens in the art room," Mannino said.

He said the art therapy, as well as his treatment at NICOE, was "one of the best things I've done so far. They care a great deal and they really want you to get better."

Evolution of patients

Walker said she enjoys seeing the evolution of the progress of the patients as they become more and more comfortable. As their sleep and pain start to stabilize, and as they're able to start to open up about some difficult things, they start doing the same in their artwork, she said.

One Marine was frustrated, Walker said. He wasn't initially able to depict anything because he used to love art, she explained.

"He said, 'I used to love art. I was very engaged in high school, and it's just not coming to me. I've got too much going through my mind.' By his second or third week, he entered the art room and said, 'I know what I want to do now,'" she said.

Walker said he recreated a moment he had been grappling with: a time he made a difficult decision in combat. He ended up spending every spare moment working on this project.

"He was really invested in this product, because he was able to take what was for him a traumatic moment and take control of it and begin to really understand it," Walker said. "At the end, he invited the entire treatment team into the art therapy space, and he shared that story with them, which was a huge step — to be able to open up to the group that had been caring for him."

She said he went on to continue to take sculpture classes.

Walker said seeing the evolution in patients like the Marine is why she continues performing her mission.

"It is so neat for us, the clinicians, to see the service members change from the first week to the fourth week," she said. "They walk in here a little uncertain and kind of skeptical initially. You can see that they're really starting to trust the others. They've perhaps been isolated, because they've been dealing with these symptoms for so long, and then by that fourth week, it's amazing watching them walk through the door — how much brighter they become and how much more comfortable they seem."

Walker said they seem to really engage with each other, socializing and laughing, and she sees the difference in the artwork, as well.

"We see improvement — that they're symbolically showing this bright future, perhaps the contrast between how they felt before and how they're feeling moving forward," Walker said. "And I'd love to see that next canvas. I hope they continue to explore that."

Army jump starts nutrition with new 'paratrooper bar'

By Jane Benson
Army Natick Soldier Research, Development and Engineering Center Public Affairs

NATICK, Mass. — Scientists at the Army Natick Soldier Research, Development and Engineering Center's Combat Feeding Directorate jumped at the chance to develop a nutrition bar based on identified paratrooper needs.

Paratroopers have demanding jobs, making proper nutrition and maintaining energy levels key to their performance and safety. Keeping paratroopers properly nourished is especially challenging during long flights when wait times between meals can last several hours.

The Combat Feeding Directorate scientists worked with the 82nd Airborne Division to solve this problem. The result is a "paratrooper bar" that is nutritious, provides energy, and is easy to carry and easy to eat.

While partnering with the 82nd earlier this year, NSRDEC's Cognitive Science Team noticed that paratroopers weren't eating during an extended period of time due to a policy that prohibits Soldiers from eating after being fitted with the parachute rigging. The Cognitive Science Team hypothesized that paratroopers' performance might improve if they could receive nutrition during this period.

"If they are rigged three or four hours before their jump, per their standard operating procedure, they were not allowed to eat anything because of concerns related to the integrity of the parachute and the harness system, specifically, about dirty fingers or food waste or things being spilled," said Jeremy Whitsitt, deputy director of the Combat Feeding Directorate.

Working from a nutrition profile recommended by the Army Research Institute of Environmental Medicine at Natick, the scientists developed the nutrition bar, focusing on carbohydrates and caffeine.

"As material developers, we identified that a beverage was not going to work," said Jeanette Kennedy, technical advisor with the directorate. "The item had to meet very specific requirements, including ease of consumption during turbulence. One solution was a nutrition bar that they can store in their left arm pocket."

The development of the paratrooper bar was part of a larger effort by several organizations in NSRDEC to partner with the 82nd to develop products and solutions that better meet Soldier needs.

"Partnering helps us find out what their needs are and can help us with future research efforts," said Kennedy. "Understanding context can help us guidance research and development to meet an identified need."

Combat Feeding Directorate scientists have been creating nutrition bars for years based on specific needs, so they were able to create the Paratrooper Bar fairly quickly. The bar was recently used by the 82nd during a trans-Atlantic exercise, Exercise Swift Response 2016.

"The Paratrooper Bar is tied directly to the Chief of Staff of the Army's No. 1 priority — readiness," said Lt. Col. Peter L. Gilbert, commander, 307th Brigade Support Battalion, 1st Brigade Combat Team, 82nd Airborne Division. "We must ensure our paratroopers remain at peak levels of readiness during large-scale airborne operations, and the development and employment of the Paratrooper Bar does exactly that."

Securing the love of baseball for military children living abroad

By Sarah Gross

WIESBADEN, Germany – Baseball. It's as American as hot dogs and apple pie.

For children of American service members living abroad, however, this concept may seem a little foreign.

While Department of Defense Education Activity schools overseas do have baseball teams, students may not have access to advanced instruction, appropriate resources, or social opportunities outside of school that revolve around the sport.

Diamond's Elite baseball camp was able to fill this gap and bring a taste of home to nearly 40 American students attending various DODEA Europe schools.

The camp, sponsored by Installation Management Command Europe, was held free of charge July 18-22 at Wiesbaden, Germany, and brought together students ages 13 to 17 with a passion for baseball from seven U.S. Army garrisons in Germany, one in Brussels and one in Vicenza, Italy.

This camp was the brainchild of Lionel Chappelle, Army veteran and security specialist for the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers Europe District. This district provides engineering support to more than 50 countries throughout Europe and Africa, with projects including missile defense and DODEA school construction.

Chappelle coaches all aspects of the game and also served for 12 years as an international scout and clinic coach for the New York Mets and Toronto Blue Jays. He played ball at Eastern Connecticut State University and in an independent league in Connecticut.

Pete Kiefer, Diamond's Elite baseball camp coach and owner of Developing Baseball International, which develops youth, as well as major and minor league players at his facility in Connecticut, teaches batting grip tools to an attendee.

while receiving personal attention from an experienced coaching staff.

"My goal is to advance their skill set and love of the game," said Chappelle.

While Chappelle has put together several baseball camps in Europe for American military kids before, this one was different.

"This camp was unique because of the heavy-hitting staff I brought aboard," said Chappelle.

Through his vast network of contacts in baseball, Chappelle's coaching team included Dallas Burke, catching and hitting instructor at Black Hawk College in Illinois; Dave Bush, second round draft pick for the Toronto Blue Jays who pitched in the big leagues for nine years with the Jays and the Milwaukee Brewers; Gene Grimaldi, international scout and clinic coach for multiple MLB teams for more than 40 years; Bill Holmberg, director of the MLB Italian Baseball Academy and coach for the Italian National Baseball Team and Italy World Baseball Classic; Pete Kiefer, owner of Developing Baseball International, which develops youth, as well as major and minor league players at his facility in Connecticut; and Paul Weaver, former director of scouting and development, and special assistant to the general manager for the Chicago Cubs.

Each student left camp with an official scouting report and implementable training tools to enhance their skills, according to Chappelle.

"These kids receive six months of instruction in four days," said Weaver.

Though the camp was advertised as a baseball camp, both boys and girls attended – ready to further develop their baseball and softball skills, respectively.

"I learned a lot of conditioning skills during this camp," said Skylar Lotomau, Wiesbaden High School softball left fielder.

Lotomau hopes to play ball in college. Stuttgart High School baseball catcher Kale Hynes, son of a specialist working at Defense Information Systems Agency - Europe, hopes to one day be in the majors.

When asked about his experiences at camp, Hynes had so much to say, he couldn't seem to put it all into words.

"The coaches fixed my swing," he said. "The coaches are really good, and they worked with every one, individually. I could say a lot, and I would encourage players to come to this camp, if it's offered again."

Chappelle hopes Diamond's Elite is more than just "offered again." He wants it to be an annual event.

The players and their parents shared his sentiment.

Amber Pickering, wife of a U.S. Navy pilot and mother to two Diamond's Elite players, tearfully addressed the coaches during the closing ceremony.

"Thanks for everything you've done," she said. "The kids don't have this here. When can we do it again?"

It's very obvious to Chappelle why this camp is sorely needed.

"People are sacrificing their lives for our country," he said. "All I want is for the game of baseball for American kids living in Europe to go from just an activity to an actual developmental program, so they have the same opportunity as their American peers to pursue a baseball or softball scholarship or become a professional player."

Training

"physically, mentally and emotionally hard."

Adding spiritual resilience is an important component, as well, he said.

"We have to train our bodies – we have to train our minds," he said. "Then we have to be able to train with emotion (and) with passion, and then we have to have something outside ourselves that we can rely on in adversity – some kind of spiritual fitness."

In addition to battlefield readiness, the training builds resilience, camaraderie, confidence and trust among the troops and services, he said.

"This kind of training allows us to bounce back quicker, because combat is brutal and unforgiving – we all know that – and bad things happen," said Troxell, who has served five combat tours of duty, including in Panama, Iraq and Afghanistan.

"In the end, when we take the fight to the enemy, it's one team and one fight. The more we can do these shared experiences and bonding between other services, the stronger we'll be when we have to fight."

With more than three decades of service, Troxell said, he has no plans of easing back on his heart-pumping training, even after he hangs up his uniform.

"I'm 52 years young and I'm going to continue to train like this until I can't do it again," he said. "I anticipate that Sergeant Major Dave Clark and Sergeant Major Mike Clements and I, when we're in our 80s, are going to be doing this same stuff. Stay tuned."
